Looking At Art The Art

But art is diametrically opposed to such “waste” and “desert air.” It is focused, concentrated, intentional, and intent. It is specifically called into material being by the creative activity of a gifted human being, and its primary purpose depends on its being viewed. It would be naive, though, to consider this act of looking a simple one.

The Art of Looking at Art | Britannica

In museums across the world, Richard Nagler stationed himself in front of his chosen piece of art, waiting for someone to come along and complete it. The serendipitous, unstaged encounters between art and individuals documented in Looking at Art, the Art of Looking are the results of that patience. At first, the egalitarian relationship between person and artwork seems perplexing: the art is not relegated to the background, nor is the individual considered a disruption.
